We explore how party structures can condition the benefits of decentralization in modern democracies. In particular, we study the interaction of two political institutions: democratic (de)centralization (whether a country has fiscally autonomous and elected local governments) and party (non)integration (whether power over local party leaders flows upwards through party institutions, which we model using control over candidate selection).

Fiscal Federalism and Political Decentralization

Fiscal Federalism and Decentralization. The role of the national (federal) government in setting the policy framework providing for common legal, social, economic and other guarantees from state to state and region to region. This role can be exercised through several mechanisms including: fiscal and funding policies, the exercise of the Constitutional authorities or the ability to convene sub-national governments and other stakeholders in a national dialogue on issues and the search and ...

Fiscal Federalism and Decentralization – Iraq Nation

As a subfield of public economics, fiscal federalism is concerned with "understanding which functions and instruments are best centralized and which are best placed in the sphere of decentralized levels of government". In other words, it is the study of how competencies and fiscal instruments are allocated across different layers of the administration. An important part of its subject matter is the system of transfer payments or grants by which a central government shares its revenues with lower

Fiscal Decentralization and Inclusive Growth

In comparing decentralization or devolution with federalism it can be observed that there is a fundamental difference. Decentralisation is devolution of powers by the central authority to lower levels. The central authority may withdraw the devolved powers at will. In contrast, in federalism powers are constitutionally divided.

Difference between Decentralization and Federalism | The

While arguing for the benefits of decentralization of expenditure, the conventional fiscal federalism view does not consider a strong linkage between local governments' own revenue and their expenditures desirable. This view instead focuses on allocative distortions under decentralized revenue collection.

Regional decentralization and fiscal incentives

The three major schools of thought supporting decentralization – the electoral model, the market model, and the fiscal efficiency model – are thus united by what might be called the median public official theorem: both elected and appointed officials become more responsive to the demands of voter-consumers as the distance between them decreases because proximity increases the potency of sanctions. 3 According to this theory of causation, public officials in a decentralized system must ...

Micro Incentives and Municipal Behavior: Political

Fiscal federalism is an economic framework for understanding the relationship between federal, state, and local governments that focuses on the division of spending and tax powers between these governments. Physical federalism is part of a broader public finance discipline. The term was coined in 1959 by Richard Musgrave, an American economist of German descent.

POLITICAL DECENTRALIZATION

There are some differences between fiscal federalism and political theories of federalism. Fiscal federalism applies to any country with both central and decentralized governments, as long as the decentralized governments have some control over spending and taxing policies. This control does not have to be substantial or constitutionally based.

First generation fiscal federalism (FGFF) studies the performance of decentralized systems under the assumption of benevolent social planners. Second Generation Fiscal Federalism (SGFF) studies the fiscal and political incentives facing subnational officials. The paper focuses on three aspects of SGFF.

Second-Generation Fiscal Federalism

This is in contrast to the 'standard' or traditional approach to the study of fiscal decentralization, which treats each level of government as a benevolent social planner, maximizing the welfare (for example, sum of utilities) of the residents of its jurisdiction, and is thus forced to make the ad hoc assumption of 'policy uniformity' in order to explain why decentralization can ever be efficient.
