Program Design Considerations for the New Personal Trainer ...

Things get a little more ambiguous when it comes to fat-loss, the most common goal any personal trainer will program for. The reason is that performance isn't measured by weight lifted or sprint times. It doesn't matter what you do as long as your clients achieve their desired results. So what is fat-loss programming?

Personal Trainer Program Design and Philosophy | The PTDC

Program Design Once you've decided how you'll break down various moves, it's time to choose the exercises for each session. Developing a sound exercise program for a client is analogous to developing a business plan; you create a blueprint for what you intend to do, while being realistic about factors that will influence what you actually do once you implement the program.
