These valentines are so nice. They are reproductions of vintage valentines. There are 25 thick paper punch out valentines and some of them have pieces to attach. There are only 8 envelopes to assemble but some of the valentines don't require an envelope because of the way that they fold and then clasp with the paper heart.

Valentines called themselves 'photographic publishers' and reproduced a great variety of photographic goods as well as the postcards for which they are best known. A price war with German postcard publishers between 1910 and 1914 had serious effects on the business. They diversified into greetings cards and calendars at this time.

Funny Valentines is one of our popular collections of die-cut Valentine's Day cards, which feature charming and whimsical images of animals and children. They were carefully selected and reproduced from Laughing Elephant's treasure trove of antique paper ephemera. Each of our three Valentine's Day card packs includes 15 different die-cut cards with decorated envelopes. Each card is approximately 4" x 6".

In Victorian Valentines certain images recur frequently. Cupids are seen, helping along love as has been their role through the ages. Hearts figure prominently. The Victorians loved all things floral, so many blooms adorn these postcards. Finally, many lovely young Victorian ladies are pictured in all their beauty. That complex of attitude and tendencies that we call the Victorian Age did not, of course, vanish on the Queen's death in 1900. It persisted and evolved until the First World War. For this book we have confined ourselves to postcards published before 1910.
